

George Washington Carver

Inventor, Humanitarian, Weather Observer

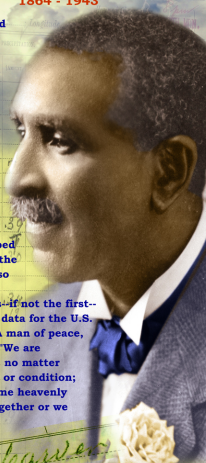

1864 - 1943

Born into slavery, frail as a child, and orphaned at an early age, George Washington

Carver became one of the great benefactors of humankind.

Always looking for ways to help his fellow man, Carver revolutionized agriculture in the American South and developed over 300 uses for the peanut. He was also among the first African-Americans--if not the first--to record weather data for the U.S. Weather Bureau. A man of peace, Carver once said, "We are brothers, all of us, no matter what race or color or condition; children of the same heavenly Father. We rise together or we fall together."

Geo. W. Carver

Photo Courtesy: State Library of Ohio

preserveamerica.noaa.gov